contents

Acknowledgments ix
Introduction: On Transitions—Changing Bodies, Changing Narratives 1

Part 1: Bodies
1. Judith Butler: Queer Feminism, Transgender, and the Transubstantiation of Sex 21
2. A Skin of One’s Own: Toward a Theory of Transsexual Embodiment 61

Part 2: Narratives
5. No Place Like Home: Transgender and Trans-Genre in Leslie Feinberg’s Stone Butch Blues 171
Epilogue: Transsexuality in Photography—Fielding the Referent 207

Notes 237
Index 261
Do we need bodies for sex?
Is gender in the head or in the body? In Second Skins Jay Prosser reveals the powerful drive that leads men and women literally to shed their skins and—in flesh and head—to cross the boundary of sex. Telling their story is not merely an act that comes after the fact, it's a force of its own that makes it impossible to forget that stories of identity inhabit autobiographical bodies.

“It is unusual to encounter a book that is as innovative, lucid, and thought-provoking as Second Skins. Prosser's book will undoubtedly become an essential work in transsexual studies, and should also be read by anyone even remotely interested in contemporary approaches to gender, sexuality, and the body.”
—Rita Felski, University of Virginia

“In his elegant, absorbing, and groundbreaking study of the transgendered subject, Jay Prosser draws on an array of autobiographical accounts by transsexuals to re-think, for our time, descriptive categories that enmesh sexuality with gender. Prosser's empathic and incisive argument will leave gender studies shaken up and permanently reconfigured.”
—Diane Wood Middlebrook, Stanford University

Jay Prosser is lecturer in English and American Studies at the University of Leicester

Gender and Culture
Carolyn G. Heilbrun and Nancy K. Miller, Editors